Letter from Saratoga.

UNITED STATES HOTEL,
SARATOGA, SEPT. 14TH, 1885.

The week just past has been a very busy one in Saratoga—and not at all dull, although the season is late. What with the Social Science Convention, the Historical Association, and the Economic Conventions—added to the daily routine of Saratoga amusements, there has been enough going on to interest all. The weather, too, has taken a change for the better, and we are all once more basking in golden autumnal days—after a rainy period almost unprecedented at this time of the year.

A great many interesting papers were read—and ably discussed at the different conventions. The Social Scientists devoted much time to the consideration of that great problem of the near future in our country, the struggle between capital and labor.

EX-PRESIDENT WHITE.

of Cornell University, spoke several times and was always listened to with great interest. Mr. White well represents the typical American gentleman, and has a charming manner and address. He is of medium size, with brown hair and beard, regular and refined features—polished manners and fine address. He has an easy, pleasant manner of speaking to a public audience, and invariably rivets the attention of his hearers. Mr. White was president of the Historical Association. Among other

PROMINENT GENTLEMEN

who took part in the proceedings of the different conventions were Prof. Goldwin Smith, of Toronto, Canada, Major General Cullum, U. S. A., who read an interesting paper upon the battle of Saratoga in 1777, Hon. Eugene Schuyler, who read a paper upon materials to be found for American history in the archives of foreign governments. Rev. Dr. Wayland of Philadelphia, and Judge Wayland, Harvard College, and Johns Hopkins University, were ably represented by Profs. Channing, Adams and others. The veteran philanthropist, Miss Elizabeth Peabody, of Boston, attended all the meetings, and occasionally rose in her place to make a few remarks. Her tresses are white with age, her face seamed with furrows, and she wore a hat and costume which would be sharply criticised by a Saratoga belle, but nevertheless the kindly old lady, whose whole life has been devoted to the public good, was everywhere treated with honor and attention. In despite of the annually aired at these conventions, any one with a keen sense of humor would find much to divert them, both in the personnel and proceedings of these august bodies of men and women. Among the women, the strong-minded female was easy to be selected—often with short hair and wearing the severest style of costume, as though the airy graces of the toilet were abominations to be devoutly avoided. Your average strong-minded woman is not a beauty, and very early learns that she has nothing to expect in the way of adoration by her good looks.

Being feminine, however, she is not going to give up her natural right of masculine heart-breaking, and she therefore employs far different tactics from her fashionable sister. She scorns the homage which is paid to beauty and dress, and intends to captivate, not by her clothes, but by herself. She makes a merit of her very eccentricities, and the simpler she becomes in dress, the more pronounced become her ideas, or rather the more singular. And she is not afraid to express her ideas in public, either, and mounts the platform with a courage which is quite astounding to the diffident masculines who crowd the seats in front of the platform, men very strong in these theories of reform, but generally rather weak in their physiques, being weak-kneed, bald-headed, and rather cadaverous looking in general. To describe the adopted by the masculine reformers at their conventions that is, where there is any hair left to be described, would be a diverting task, if we had space at command. A favorite mode of presenting a picturesque appearance in the rear, when nature has left the front of the skull quite bare, is to part the hair in the middle behind, and to comb the long locks coquettishly over the ears. Another parts his hair horizontally just a little above the nape of his neck and combs the upper locks upward to cover the barren waste of the head on the top, while a third allows his hair to grow long, and then ties it together at the back in an odd little queue, which easily awakens the risibles of the youngsters. Bandanna handkerchiefs and skull-caps were frequently worn to protect bald heads, and really, would it not be an admirable thing to revive the fashion of powdered wigs as worn in the olden time, for how much handsomer Addison looked in his flowing, curling locks than any wit or genius of the present day can possibly look, with-naught but a shining skull between his profundity of brain and the outer world! This week the

and the Presbyterian clergymen are coming to town, and will hold their sessions, which will be attended with more or less interest. At the States they are making ready for the politicians, who will arrive in force next week. This is the only hotel in the place which keeps its band throughout this month to enliven the mornings and evenings. Upon Saturday last there was an informal dance in the parlor, and rooms were crowded, so that one could hardly realize that we were nearing the middle of September. Society here was much shocked to hear of the sudden the famous lawyer of Chicago. Mr. Storrs and his charming wife have been expected here all the season, they having been among the regular habitués of the place, and the witty stories, brilliant flashes of thought, which made Mr. Storrs a boon companion in society, have been much missed this summer in Saratoga. Business engagements, however, prevented Mr. Storrs from spending even a little time here, and now that he has forever passed away from the ceaseless struggles and toils of earth, to be seen among us here no more forever, there is a profound feeling of sorrow among his hosts of friends, and the deepest sympathy everywhere expressed for his most faithful and devoted wife.

DEATH OF EMORY A. STORRS,

SOPHIE SPARKLE.

Union Gospel Meeting.

The opening meeting in the old Lecture Room of the First Presbyterian church was largely attended, and about one-half the audience were ladies.

Rev. H. M. Dodd, of Augusta, N. Y., related some of his early experiences in the contest against the rum traffic. He enlisted in the warfare in opposition to intemperance when a lad and for forty years had continued to oppose rum-selling and liquor drinking at every opportunity. He strongly urged all parents to encourage their children to unite with the temperance army from the earliest period and so be preserved from the temptations that environ them, and the tempters that would lure them to destruction.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union was doing a noble work in its efforts to reform the drunkard and save the tipplers from their danger of becoming drunkards, yet the greatest and most hopeful part of woman's work was that of educating children concerning temperance and the sin of intemperance and preventing them from entering upon the downward path which leads to the drunkard's grave. Let the children be well instructed in regard to the evil effects of liquor drinking and so cut off any further supply of victims to the rum traffic.

He hoped much success would follow temperance work in Bloomfield; he came from a place where the citizens had for years refused license to liquor shops, and the results were highly gratifying. Mr. Dodd made an earnest and forcible plea in behalf of the union of all temperance workers and well-wishers, by which the victory can be secured and the curse of intemperance removed from the land.

Messrs. Batchelder and Biddulph gave some statistics regarding the number of licenses granted in Orange, Montclair etc., showing that Bloomfield is supplied with liquor shops in the proportion of 3 to 1 compared to East Orange and 2 to 1 compared with Montclair. This miserable state of affairs required immediate attention from all friends of law and order.

Mr. George W. Cook responded to this appeal to all good citizens to arouse and combine against the prevalence of the rum traffic in Bloomfield. He saw the time had come to discard all merely political names and unite against the rum power before it was too late. Citizens of every name must awaken to this important issue and elect men who will execute the laws. By giving place to one saloon in Bloomfield others have followed till now the number of licensed and unlicensed liquor shops was unendurable. The reputation and prosperity of the town were involved.

Miss Uford, from Concord, North Carolina, spoke of the progress of temperance work in that State, giving some account of the efforts to benefit the children of that class hitherto termed "poor whites" at the South. Among these the principles of temperance were gaining a foothold, and she was much encouraged, thanking God for the privilege of working among the neglected white children of that State.

When you give a dinner, it is necessary to do more than merely order it from the caterer and then be on hand at the stated time. A Buffalo gentleman has arrived, by sad experience, at this conclusion. He had the table set for 50 covers, and at a big cost, but not a soul came to the feast. He was as mad as blazes, and puzzled himself almost crazy trying to guess what he had done that such an indignity should be put upon him. As he was going to bed that night he happened to open his secretary, and there were all the invitations. Not one had been sent out.

During a discussion at Hackettstown, recently, over the question of what constitutes a "horse power," a local sportsman offered a wager that twenty men could pull more than a horse. The offer was accepted by John Sliker, and on Saturday last the trial was made. The stipulations were that a single horse should pull twenty men off their feet; that a rope thirty feet long should secure whatever foothold they could on the level ground, and that the men should be placed as near to the horse as possible. The men won easily, and there are men about town willing to bet that ten men can outpull an ordinary horse. There were about eight hundred persons at the pulling match.

THE BOON COMPANIONS

A GREAT HIT!

All of our customers who were fortunate in procuring a copy of our last Souvenir, "Her First Love," will be pleased to learn that we have commenced distribution of the companion picture to that great card, entitled "The Boon Companions." These cards are nothing if not taken together; side by side they constitute the most admirable pair of pictures ever seen on a wall. We shall continue the distribution until notice is given to the contrary.

BAKING POWDER!

ASTONISHING RESULTS.

In offering our Baking Powder to the public we knew that we were placing upon the market an article which would bear the full force of our hearty recommendation, and as we have always endeavored to deal squarely with the people, we felt perfectly justified in asking their kind consideration in behalf of our new venture, and we, of course, expected to realize a considerable sale for our "Baking Powder," but we have been thoroughly astonished at the immense reception given to it by the people at large, having sold more Baking Powder in the last two weeks than we expected to dispose of in six months. Everybody speaks in the highest terms of its goodness and purity, which leads us to hope that the sales will be still greatly increased. Remember, we give checks with the Baking Powder the same as with Tea and Coffee. Don't go another week without trying it, if you have not already done so.

Elgin Creamery Butter

The best the market affords and it costs you but 22c per pound. We do not ask you to take our word concerning the merits of our Butter. We prefer that you go to some other store, buy a pound of their 22c Butter and compare it with that sold by us. We feel that this method is the most forcible which can be adopted.

NEW TEAS—This season's crop on sale. We imported this stock, and it will take at least two months before it can be found in any other retail store. In fact, everything tends to show you that we keep the most perfectly equipped Tea Stores to be found in the country.
